Reviewer's Comment for Publication.

The manuscript presents a relevant and interesting discussion of addiction as a form of psychological self-medication, integrating psychopathological, psychoanalytic, and empirical perspectives. The discussion of emotional regulation, negative reinforcement, and the self-medication hypothesis is informative and provides a meaningful theoretical understanding of addictive behaviours. The manuscript also appropriately acknowledges the limitations of existing evidence and avoids presenting self-medication as a universal explanation for addiction. However, the literature selection methodology requires further clarification, and some theoretical arguments would benefit from stronger integration with empirical findings. Minor improvements in language, formatting, and reference presentation are also needed. Overall, the manuscript has good academic relevance and may be considered for publication after minor revision.
