Short Review Report

The manuscript titled "From Reaction to Results: Measuring the Effectiveness of Halal Training Programs Using Kirkpatrick's Model" examines the evaluation of halal training programmes using Kirkpatrick's Four-Level Training Evaluation Model. The study adopts a qualitative case study approach and provides useful insights into participant reactions, learning outcomes, behavioural change, and organisational impact within the halal industry.

The topic is relevant and contributes to the literature on halal governance and Islamic management. The findings highlight the importance of management commitment and organisational culture in ensuring effective training outcomes. However, the paper would benefit from a more detailed discussion of the methodology and a stronger linkage between findings and existing literature.

Overall, the manuscript is well-structured and can be considered for publication with minor revisions.
