Reviewer's Comment for Publication.

The manuscript addresses an important and timely topic concerning supply chain resilience in Australia amid global disruptions, including pandemics, natural disasters, geopolitical tensions, and strategic resource dependencies. The study provides a systematic integrative review of 30 peer-reviewed articles and presents a comprehensive discussion of supply chain vulnerabilities, resilience strategies, digital capabilities, knowledge management, and national policy considerations. The proposed multi-level resilience framework effectively connects firm-level strategies with sectoral coordination and national preparedness. The manuscript is logically organised, demonstrates good engagement with relevant literature, and offers meaningful insights for researchers, business organisations, and policymakers. The research questions are clearly stated, and the discussion and conclusion appropriately reflect the study's objectives. Overall, the manuscript makes a valuable contribution to the field of supply chain management and resilience. Minor revision is recommended to improve the methodological clarity and ensure consistency in the presentation of tables, figures, and references.
